Official Description
This course offers a critical examination of the role of electronic communication, information technology, and the Internet on public culture and the organization of social behaviour and interaction.

Learning Objectives
1) Getting familiar with the main concepts, theories and authors of a sub-discipline that has been called “Sociology of the Internet”, “Sociology of Cyberculture”, “Cybersociology” or, more recently, “Digital Sociology”.
2) Engaging with research on the Internet and on digital technologies that emerged from various fields of study, but that are relevant to sociologists.
3) Understanding the social implications of new technologies and their impact on issues such as surveillance, privacy, intimacy, social organization, social interaction, inequalities, crime, political participation, education, social economy, war reporting, etc.
4) Applying sociological theories and using social science methods to study online communities, social networks, online practices and digital tools.
5) Participating in debates around new media and developing critical thinking skills.

Assigned readings
The weekly readings are available on our Moodle website and should be read before the courses. You must bring copies of the assigned readings to class, either in electronic or paper form, because you might need them during class discussions and group activities.

Assignments

Participation – 15%, individual, logbook due for April 6

A portion of your grade will be determined by your participation and engagement. This does not simply mean attending class, but also participating in class activities and uploading content on our Moodle website when required. You will be allowed (and sometimes asked) to use your phone, tablet or laptop in class, but please refrain from checking emails, Facebook, Twitter, news or playing games unless it is related to the course. Students who do not comply will lose points. Each week, you will have to write, in your logbook, a short comment or question of 70 words that engages with the assigned readings and that focuses on one key theme or argument that you find interesting or challenging. You will have to submit a paper copy of your logbook at the end of the last class. The comments or questions will be evaluated on the basis of their relevance to the assigned readings.

Mid-term paper – 45%, teams of 3-4 students, due for March 2

The teams of 3-4 students will have to submit a 12 page paper (1 inch margins, 1½ spaced, Times New Roman, size 12, proper quotations) on the Internet phenomenon or the digital technology of their choice. They will have to apply sociological theories or use social science methods to study this phenomenon in a sociological perspective. They will also have to mobilize a minimum of four reliable sources (can include the weekly readings) to backup their affirmations. They will finally have to provide supporting evidence and examples to illustrate their ideas. The teams can meet me after class or during my office hours in order to discuss the paper and get feedback. The papers will be evaluated on the basis on these criteria:

- Respect of the guidelines (deadline, number of pages, quotations, references): /4
- Quality of the writing (clarity, flow, grammar and syntax): /5
- Organization and coherence (development of ideas, logic, transitions): /12
- Quality of the argument and originality of the ideas: /12
- Pertinence and good use of the sources: /12
* You will lose 15% for each day of delay

Final examination – 40 %, individual, date to be determined

At the end of the semester, you will have 1 hour 30 minutes to answer a series of multiple-choice questions without your notes and without access to electronic devices. The questions will evaluate your understanding of the key ideas and concepts learned along the semester and will be elaborated with the Power Point presentations only.

All assignments can be submitted in either French or English.
